California Deskbook on Complex Civil Litigation Management

It all started in 1996 when a client took a chance and called Bill with a simple message, "Here's your opportunity. Our go-to lawyer has a conflict. Before the conflict, that lawyer said this case was a winner on a motion for summary judgment (MSJ) and provided a $70,000 fee budget. If you can get rid of it efficiently, I will send you more cases." With this incentive, Bill assessed the new case and agreed it was an MSJ case. However, rather than serving discovery and taking depositions to prepare the MSJ, he went a different direction. He immediately set out to convince plaintiff's counsel to dismiss the case against his client due to its lack of merit, and instead focus on the other case defendants. It took some arm twisting, but it worked, and a voluntary dismissal without any discovery was secured from plaintiff's counsel. The fee was less than $5,000 and the case was closed within six weeks from assignment.

Claims, Disputes and Litigation Involving BIM

Legal Risk Management for In-House Counsel and Managers

It all started in 1996 when a client took a chance and called Bill with a simple message: "Here's your opportunity. Our regular lawyer has a conflict. Before the conflict, that lawyer said this case was a winner on a motion for summary judgment (MSJ) and provided a $70,000 fee budget. If you can get rid of it efficiently, I will send you more cases." With this incentive, Bill assessed the new case and agreed it was an MSJ case. But, rather than serving discovery and taking depositions, he went a different direction. He set out to convince the plaintiff's counsel to dismiss the case against his client due to its lack of merit and instead direct his attention to the other case defendants. It worked, and Bill secured a voluntary dismissal from the plaintiff's counsel without any discovery. The fee was less than $5,000, and the case was closed within six weeks of the assignment. While some might say the law firm "lost $65,000" by not litigating the case, they would be dead wrong. This result and the process that produced it led to hundreds of cases and were instrumental in growing the firm from four lawyers in Georgia to over fifty attorneys across several states. The goal remains to be the Disruptive Lawyer who consistently produces excellent results as defined by clients' specific performance goals.

Civil litigation is more frequently giving rise to cases that are regarded as complex so that they are expensive for parties to run, time-consuming and use a large amount of tax-payer funded court resources. The government, judiciary and legal practitioners have expressed concern as to how to efficiently manage these cases. This book examines the case management tools available to the modern day judge for dealing with crucial aspects of complex civil litigation. The first chapter explains case management, complex civil litigation and how the former may be used to control the latter. Subsequent chapters focus on case management in relation to pleadings, discovery, expert evidence, alternative dispute resolution, summary judgment and the separate question procedure. The author also explains the role of the overriding/overarching purpose with its command that civil litigation is to be conducted in a manner which achieves justice while minimising cost and delay as this has major significance for complex cases. Latter chapters consider two specific examples of complex litigation and the ways in which they may be dealt with " commercial litigation and the specialist lists that have developed to deal with this type of case in New South Wales, Victoria and in the Federal Court, and class action or representative proceedings in the Federal Court. Lastly, the concerns or limitations as to case management are examined.

Such litigation results when the protection of inventions or the entry of a new product into the market is not properly managed. This practical book provides a well-considered plan for invention protection and management that can be used effectively to avoid expensive, time-consuming, and sometimes company-killing patent infringement litigation. However, because not all patent infringement litigation can be avoided, the second part of this important book explains how to manage patent infringement litigation should it become necessary. This book is perfect for corporate counsel and executives, and provides information on the management of invention protection; the characteristics of a high quality patent; avoiding patent infringement litigation from an offensive and defensive perspective; how to evaluate a patent before litigation; and how to make a patent ready for negotiation, settlement, or litigation. In addition, multiple appendices have been added to provide examples of documents used in invention protection and patent infringement litigation.

Case Management and Complex Civil Litigation

Companies must either properly manage the complex world of legal and corporate risk or suffer the consequences. Author Bryan E. Hopkins, the former general counsel of Samsung Electronics America, identifies the numerous areas of legal and corporate risk that managers and their company counsel face daily. More importantly, he provides concrete examples that demonstrate how to minimize or mitigate legal and corporate risk. He provides case studies, practical information, and insights to help you conduct an initial legal risk assessment; establish a compliance program; retain records that minimize risk; transfer risk; and navigate the discovery process. Legal counsel must take an active effort in developing strategies, systems, and processes that minimize the legal risks faced by the company on a daily basis. Managers must also be involved to ensure the company develops a successful legal risk management program. Many companies don't think about risk management until they're confronted with class-action lawsuits, product liability claims, government investigations, shareholder actions, and fines. Take a proactive approach to protecting your company with Legal Risk Management for In-House Counsel and Managers."
